

Example 1

1. According to the Adelaide University Clubs (www.adelaide.edu.au/clubs), we can see there is menu bar on the top, which is relative to Uni service, but our student club website only provide information of club which mean that we don't need the menu bar of Uni service. Instead, we can put our club information on menu bar.
2. There is website logo on the top left, and login button on the right
3. Information in the main page is brief introduction of student club website, and a list of the club names and pictures.
4. On the left of the main page, there is "find a club" button, which we can search more club there

5. After user click the “Join a club” button, we can see there is a club guide

6. After user click the club photo, it would jump to the detail of this club, and there is video of the club, and then we found out there is no “join” button, which make user hard to join the club

Summary:

Pros:

The main page is very user friendly, and there are video on the club detail page which can let user know about the club quickly

Cons:

We think the downside of this website is users have to read the information of “Join a club” page, which isn’t easy for user to join, we should just make an “join” button in the club detail page.

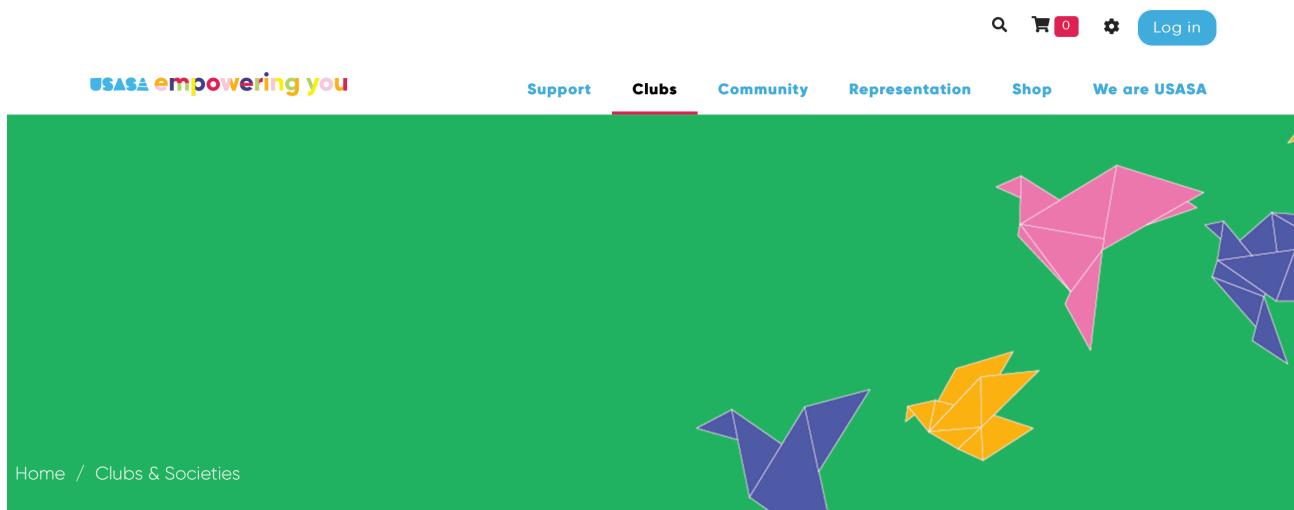

The menu bar is too complicated

The photo in main page between the menu bar and the club list is irrelevant to student club

Example 2

Let's see another example which is Unisa student clubs (www.usasa.sa.edu.au/clubs)

1. The menu bar is similar to example 1
2. Website logo on the top left and Login button on the top right which is same as example 1
3. A list of club names and club photos in the main page same as example 1
4. The photo in main page between the menu bar and the club list is simple, its function is to separate the menu bar and club list, make user easy to focus what they want to see

5. The different of this with example 1 is there is a search bar above the clubs list, so users can easier search club on the same page instead of jumping to others pages

6. After you click on one of the club photo, it would show you the brief information of this club, and on the right is the contact method of the club, so that the users can easier contact the club manager and get more information from the manager

7. And there is “join the club” button, so user can easily join the club easily unlike example 1

8. The login page is very simple and user friendly without too much unless information

Summary:

Pros:

Easy to join the club

Easy to login

The photo in main page between the menu bar and the club list is better than example 1

Cons:

Not enough information of the club in club detail page

Exapmple 3:

We aren't manager of Adelaide uni student club or Unisa student club, so we can't access the users management system, so that we look at SaaS users management system

In this website we can see that, on the left is menu bar, on the right is user's information, the user's role and we can remove users from the system (club), therefore we can implement a management system base on this
